For over a decade, Iran’s nuclear programme has been a complicated and controversial issue in the international arena. The recently signed Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPSA), between Iran and the P5+1 (China, France, Russia, the UK, the US plus Germany), represents a significant denouement. With a pending vote in the US Congress and a potential vote in the Iranian parliament, will the agreement hold and what are likely scenarios in the short to long-term? Will this breakthrough agreement herald an era of greater cooperation on a range of regional issues or will this opportunity be squandered? How will it play out domestically in both Iran and US? And what role is there for non-permanent UNSC-member New Zealand attempting to make good use of its independent credentials and expand its economic horizons? In this NZIIA panel discussion, leading experts from NZ and overseas will examine the impact of this deal for Iran, the region, and the world — and New Zealand.
